

Fast, Reliable and Proven Results.

Move Forward with Confidence.

The most successful listing agents know the critical importance of protecting their sellers from unnecessary delays, price reduction or repair costs associated with radon. Immediately upon listing the property, they'll discuss radon with the seller and explain that a buyer will likely request a radon test be conducted as part of due diligence.

Protect Your Clients.

Radon tests conducted with cheap devices can yield false positives, leading to seller anxiety and remorse caused by:

- Uncertainty and confusion about what to do next
- Questions over whether another test is warranted
- Concerns over the reliability of the home inspector's device
- Indecision and delays while additional testing is conducted
- Increased costs incurred simply to resolve "buyer mistrust" and concerns over potential test interference

The Trusted Testing Solution.

A certified radon test report from Radalink is the most trusted in the industry because all instruments are owned, serviced and calibrated by Radalink — not left to the home inspector. This certification ensures that the inspector cannot access or alter any data produced by the instrument, and reports are published in a locked PDF file that cannot be altered.

Work with the Best in the Business.

Radalink's knowledgeable staff is always available to provide reliable, accurate information and guidance to address the questions and concerns of all involved parties. Our highly trained and skilled radon measurement specialists (not just the home inspector) review all test results for indications of influence caused by severe storms, closed house conditions or possible instrument disturbance or malfunction.

When results are below the action level, the buyer is protected by the industry's only 120-day written guarantee—which actually pays toward the cost of mitigation.

Be a Leader.

Top-selling agents agree that referrals and repeat clients are the lifeblood of their business. Enjoy the peace of mind that comes from knowing you provide your clients the best resources and information available. Work with the very best—choose home inspectors who use Radalink Radon Monitors.

If It Doesn't Say Radalink, It's Not a Certified Radon Report.

Radalink is one of the few radon instrument manufacturers with devices that meet the EPA real estate device requirement for minimum sensitivity of at least 16 CPH/pCi/L. Since the EPA abandoned the radon proficiency program in 1996, the private proficiency program and its licensing states have continued to disregard this requirement, allowing home inspectors all across the country and to perform radon tests with substandard equipment.
